Window sills

WERZALIT window sills are manufactured with great care using carefully selected materials. The manufacturing process and selection of the raw materials are based on over 50 years of experience in the production and use of WERZALIT products.

The core of WERZALIT window sills is made of industrial timber that originates in Germany from PEFC-certified forestry operations. This core substance is resistant to building moisture and does not rot. The surface of the window sills consists of multiple layers of melamine resin films (no phenol laminate) that are joined together seamlessly and permanently pressed into the core material. The decor layer is embedded into the melamine resin and reliably protected to make it highly resistant to UV, scratches and abrasion. As a result, the decor layer remains beautiful for a very long time.

The window sill is produced as a moulded part through a globally patented WERZALIT process and not through the bonding of individual parts. The WERZALIT process prevents damage such as rising glue joints, delamination or damage from penetrating building moisture.
